Rajan, who has operated a tea shop in Sriperumbudur for nearly three decades, remembers a very different town.

From tea shops, grocery and hardware stores to drinking-water suppliers, mechanics and local transport operators, entrepreneurs across Sriperumbudur say their businesses have grown as the town has expanded. "When I started, the customer base was small and the surrounding area was far less developed. Today, small houses have given way to flats, more companies and agencies have emerged, and a much larger population now lives and works in the area," Rajan said.

The presence of major manufacturers, including Samsung's Chennai plant, has been part of a broader industrial ecosystem that has brought more jobs, people and economic activity to the area. His shop has grown alongside the neighbourhood, with the steady flow of customers reflecting the wider transformation taking place around him.
